Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Library of Princeton Univeresity One of the most striking features in the progress of education in America in recent years has been the growth and development of engineering and technical schools. The old established institutions of this kind have improved in equipment, new schools have been established, and many of our colleges have organized technical courses side by side with their regular academic departments. This has been in response to a distinct demand, as is shown by the number of students taking these courses, and by their growth as compared with that of the old line colleges. Two causes are apparent for this tendency. One is to be found in the great material prosperity of our country and in the progress of scientific development, especially in the application of scientific knowledge and principles to the practical problems of every day life. The extension of railroads and trolley lines, the growth of manufactures, the increase of great buildings, which are engineering rather than architectural works, the marvellous development of electricity, and the application of scientific principles to the construction of roads, sewers, and other necessities of civilized life, have created a demand for trained engineers to plan and build these works, and to maintain and operate them when completed. Students, seeing this demand, have flocked to the courses which prepared men to supply it. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
