The mosquitoes and black flies were driven out of the tent before retiring by the smoke from a smudge. As they all gathered around the big camp-fire in front of the tent, after the sun had gone down, Fred heard a strange cry coming from some distance on the lake, resembling a little child in distress. What is that cry, Silas? I reckon that be the loon. What is a loon? The loon, Fred, said his father, is a swimming and diving bird, often called the great northern diver. I think Silas can tell you much about his habits. Please do, Silas, said Fred. I have seen loons a good many times. When they have their young with them, and a man comes near suddenly, the old birds go one way making a great noise, and the young uns go off a different way. If followed 8 the loon usually dives, and I ave known em to double on the hunters and swim under the boat and come up a long distance the other side. As they only put the head above water at such times, it s very hard to find em. Did you ever shoot any, Silas? Only a few times. The last one I shot was in a curious way. I was showing a boy how to make bullets skip on the surface of Moosehead Lake. I had seen a loon out...
